AMCOS...

Solutions for copying music.

AMCOS in brief

As a general rule, the reproduction of a copyright musical work needs the permission (or “licence”) of the work’s copyright owner or representative.

Australasian Mechanical Copyright Owners Society (AMCOS) was established in 1979 by songwriters and music publishers to provide a centralised way of licensing the reproduction of their musical works for a variety of purposes.

AMCOS represents the vast majority of the world’s composers, writers and music publishers through its members’ sub-publishing agreements and via its own reciprocal arrangements with similar societies around the world.

Since 1997 Australasian Performing Right Association (APRA) has managed AMCOS’ operations. However, AMCOS remains a separate entity from APRA.

AMCOS membership can be tailored to suit each member’s particular needs. Members can choose:

- ☰ the kind of mandate they give to AMCOS
- ☰ to obtain a licence back, so they can deal directly with a copyright user for a specific production, and
- ☰ to appoint AMCOS as their agent for specific productions not covered by the member’s general mandate.

AMCOS licenses the reproduction of its members’ musical works for many different purposes. These include the manufacture of CDs, music videos and DVDs, the sale of mobile phone ringtones and digital downloads, the use of production music and the making of audiovisual and broadcast material.

AMCOS distributes all the money it collects from these licences (approximately $30 million), less its commission, to its members and reciprocal societies for the use of their musical works.

In this way, AMCOS provides a valuable service to:

- ☰ music publishers
- ☰ individual composers and songwriters, and
- ☰ people and businesses who want to reproduce copyright musical works.

AMCOS membership

You can become a member of AMCOS if you are:

a music publisher, songwriter, composer or lyricist

an owner of copyright in musical works

and

at least one of your works has been released for sale to the public

and

you are a citizen of or normally resident in Australia or NZ, or you are a music publishing company registered in Australia.

services offered to AMCOS members

AMCOS will, subject to your mandate (as advised on your application form):

- ≡ collect and pay your mechanical royalties from record companies
- ≡ collect royalties from other music users including radio and television broadcasters and educational institutions
- ≡ provide comprehensive back-end licensing to complement your marketing of production music libraries
- ≡ license your music in emerging markets – for example, legal download services or for mobile phone ringtones
- ≡ provide quarterly royalty statements and distributions, and
- ≡ if you require, register your works with mechanical copyright collecting societies around the world.

benefit from our experience

AMCOS is recognised nationally and internationally as the organisation that administers music reproduction copyright in Australasia. Our licensing and distribution systems are well established and tested. As a member, you will benefit from our:

- ≡ lobbying for global copyright protection in the information society,

* AMCOS royalty distributions are subject to the terms of any publishing contract by which a member is bound.

- ≡ new media licensing initiatives
- ≡ online services – register your works online via our website, browse through our works database to research ownership information
- ≡ state-of-the-art electronic clearance system for record releases
- ≡ strategic alliance with APRA
- ≡ low operating costs, and
- ≡ broad spread of income streams – AMCOS can handle the use of musical works in all commercially available recorded media, as well as broadcasting and other usage.

It's flexible: you can retain control over certain types of usage, if required.

And it's low cost: There is no joining or annual fee and AMCOS' commission rates compare very favourably with similar overseas societies. The standard commission is 10%, but is higher (17.5%) where a member has fewer than 500 recorded works.

AMCOS is neither a publisher nor a substitute for a publisher.

AMCOS provides a valuable licensing and royalty collection service for music copyright owners, however, it does not and cannot play the role of a music publisher. AMCOS does not promote or market musical works and does not provide advances. By its very nature it must provide a non-preferential service across all musical works.

It is also important to note that AMCOS' royalty distributions are subject to the terms of any publishing contract by which a member is bound.

AMCOS Licensing

Music reproduction licensing is traditionally split into two areas: synchronisation and reproduction.

synchronisation

What this means

Putting music with visual images or other effects – such as in films, television programs, commercials, DVD, online.

How AMCOS can help

AMCOS does not license synchronisations (other than Production Music, via an agency appointment or as part of a statutory right). However, the AMCOS Research Facility can obtain the appropriate ownership and contact details for you so you can seek permission directly.

The AMCOS Research Facility – for a small fee - can direct you to the appropriate copyright owner when you want to:

- reproduce music in the soundtrack of a film or other audio-visual production
- reproduce music into television programs
- use music in advertisements (this includes lyric changes or re-recordings), and
- make copies of the print/sheet music or lyrics of a musical work, by any means.

Contact the Research Facility on 02 9935 7900 or email mehres@apra.com.au

reproduction

What this means

Making copies of music on any type of sound carrier device – including CD, digital downloads, music videos and mobile phone ringtones.

How AMCOS can help

AMCOS can provide you with the licence you need to do these activities.

AMCOS can license you to:

- make recordings of musical works for retail purposes

- make recordings of musical works for non-retail purposes: for example, to produce background music systems, syndicated radio programs, aerobic or for inflight entertainment, and so on
- use production music¹ in films, audio and audiovisual productions and commercials
- if you are a broadcaster reproduce music for use in radio and television programs
- use music online, on a website for example
- provide musical ringtones to mobile telephone users
- provide a legitimate music download service
- make copies of print music if you are a school
- transfer music from one format to another – either for personal use or as part of a business.

And, with ARIA (Australian Record Industry Association):

- reproduce musical works and sound recordings as part of your dance school business, and
- reproduce musical works and sound recordings into the soundtracks of videos of weddings and other similar events for home-viewing
- make copies of music and recordings for educational purposes if you are a school.

These licences exclude the use of music – other than Production Music - in advertisements, giveaways or as theme music.

¹Production Music is music which is specifically written and recorded for inclusion in audiovisual, audio and other productions. Production Music cannot be obtained through normal retail outlets and is available from AMCOS Production Music suppliers for convenient and cost-effective synchronisation and dubbing into such productions.

Licence fees & charges

AMCOS licence fees depend on the type of licence issued. In some cases, the fee applies to each specific reproduction (generally on a per-unit basis), in others, AMCOS charges a “blanket” fee that covers all reproductions or synchronisations over a set period.

For more information about licence fees, check the APRA website at www.apra.com.au, send an email with your inquiry to info@amcos.com.au, or call our Media Licensing Department (02 9935 7900).

How AMCOS keeps track of copying

When a music user takes out an AMCOS licence agreement, they agree to provide AMCOS with specific information about the music being reproduced and how it will be used, sold or distributed. For most licence holders this means providing complete details of all works used. For record labels for instance, this will include the number of units sold, the name of the work, writers, the title and catalogue number of the production, the wholesale or retail price, the number sold, and so on. Other licence holders must report all music used over their reporting period.

AMCOS' Research Department is constantly tracking new releases, television programs, films, radio stations and the internet. AMCOS undertakes regular audits to check the accuracy of this data provided by licensees – areas of audit include record companies, ringtone providers and production studios.

Who runs AMCOS

The day to day business functions of AMCOS are managed by APRA, the Australasian Performing Right Association. However, AMCOS has its own board of directors and makes all strategic decisions.

While APRA and AMCOS share a common membership, they manage separate copyright rights for their members.

APRA administers the “performing” rights of its members and AMCOS the “reproduction” rights of its members.

To find out more about AMCOS board of directors or management team, visit the APRA/AMCOS website at www.apra.com.au and select About APRA from the menu options.

Other licences you may need

To use copyright material such as visual images or text a licensee may need permission from other copyright collecting societies or copyright owners.

To perform or transmit the production (for example, use as a music-on-hold tape or on an internet website, on television or playing music in a business), a licensee will need a separate licence from APRA.

There is also a distinct and separate copyright in a sound recording. So, if a licensee wants to copy an original recording from a CD, tape or any other pre-recorded format, in addition to the AMCOS licence, permission for the reproduction of the sound recording of that work may be required. Contact the Australian Record Industry Association (phone 02 8569 1144) for advice.
